Foreign Wine Cellars, 69, Dean-street,

Soho. JAMES THEOBALD begs leave to inform the public that he has opened the above Cellars with the intention of clearing and bottling Wines from the Docks, and disposing of them in their genuine state. Having held a situation in the Wine Department, London Docks, for eleven years, together with a long connection with the Wine Trade, he possesses unusual advantages of procuring Wines of the finest qualities.

He has now on sale a large stock of FINE OLD WINES in excellent condition, which have lain in bond from three to seven years, upon which advances have been made, and he is consequently enabled to offer them at exceedingly moderate prices.

Gentlemen about to purchase Wine from the wood (the advantage of which is well known to connoisseurs, as the removal of crusted Port, however fine, often impairs its quality), will find it their interest to favour him with their orders, as profit will at all times be a secondary consideration to securing the finest and choicest vintages.

He begs leave to call attention to his very superior PORT and SHERRY, which may be had drawn from the wood at 14s. per gallon, or 28s. per dozen, and upwards. Sample bottles at the same prices.

J. T. undertakes to clear Wine from the Docks, to fine, bottle, and deliver them, in any quantity, within five miles of London, at 4s. per dozen—bottles, corks, laths, and sawdust included. Wines carefully removed at 1s. per dozen.

Mendelssohn's Six Grand Sonatas for the Organ, inscribed to his friend, Dr. F. Schlemmer. In one volume, price 21s., or in six numbers, 4s. each.

This is a marvellous work, and the renaissance of church instrumental music. It is the book of the epoch. We could have as little anticipated this stupendous emanation of a giant genius, as the revival of the mediatorial dances, the discovery of the ancient chorus to each of the psalms, or the tableaux vivans of a Mosarabic celebration, Cardinal Ximenes and his choir dancing with a decorum equalling their devotion before the high altar in the Great Cathedral of Toledo. Hitherto religion has had only one organist, Sebastian Bach, the solitary high priest, to whom was given that eloquence of song mightier than that of speech, and who living only for his church, and wholly intent upon the truth, quickened and embodied it into the high symbols of a pure and primitive form of Christian worship. Bach was the apostle of church musical art: his mission was the marriage of beauty with devotion; and most reverently, and yet, withal, most gorgeously, did he celebrate the rites. He dies, and a century passes away. The temple of harmony, the scene of his mission and his accomplishments, remains open. We can see the long nave, the groined arches of the aisles, the sweet repose of the choir, and the clear obscure of the long distant chapels—mysterious echoes float around the building, but before the door there undulates an aerial and crystal-lined curtain, which refuses to yield except to a like spirit—to the same single-minded devotion—to the same mighty assiduity in holy ministrations. A century has passed, and Mendelssohn, separating himself from his contemporaries, purifying himself by the same loneliness and solitary communion with the parent of all that is good and beautiful, raises the veil, and enters to assist in the perfect development of that of which his prototype had so wondrously laid the corner stone, and outlined all its glorious details. There are now two organ composers; the present epoch has envolved a second in Felix Mendelssohn.

These organ sonatas challenge all rivalry—defy all competition. No living mind but Mendelssohn's could have conceived them."—Morning Chronicle, March 6th, 1846.

Frederick Hamilton, A.M., Chaplain and Superintendent of the Royal Academy of Music. Price 12s.

(The above may be had in Twelve Numbers, 1s. each.)

In the above named work, which has been carefully revised by one whose sentiments are in accordance with those of the Record Newspaper, particular attention has been paid to the selection of the words: it therefore deserves the notice of those whose object it is to promote private and social devotion.

Another of the daily Cures performed.

Extract of a letter from Mr. James Froud, Chemist, Dorchester.
March 4th, 1848.

Gentlemen,—Having just received the following, I beg to hand it to you, as a further proof of the excellence of Dr. Locock's Pulmonic Wafers, which are generally spoken of in this neighbourhood in terms of the highest commendation.

A gentleman, a clergyman, called on me this afternoon, and expressed himself with much pleasure of the decided benefit his sister has received from the Wafers.

She had been for some years the subject of a most distressing cough. The remedies usually employed by the profession had not succeeded in affording relief; other remedies were resorted to, respecting which the daily press tell wondrous tales. Still only occasional and temporary ease was obtained; but on trying your preparation, Dr. Locock's Wafers, benefit was almost instantly derived, and by a little steady perseverance, the cough, which was before distressingly troublesome, is now perfectly cured.
I am, Gentlemen, JAMES FROUD.
